

Tutela dell'ambiente e crisi globali

Francisco Balaguer Callejón

Abstract

The protection of the environment is facing a paradox in recent years. On the one hand, there is a growing global awareness of the need to attend to the protection of the environment as an existential problem in which there are no longer any options other than strict policies if we want to preserve life on our planet. On the other hand, the development of global crises that are conditioning the fight against climate change and generating a very strong tension in relation to environmental policies. It is necessary to reflect on these crises and try to isolate them from environmental issues, so that it is possible to combine the aims oriented at solving the crisis with the protection of the environment through policies coherent and sustained over the time.